

Mr. Mark Dailey is the President and an owner at Integrus Architecture. As a principal-in-charge of design, Mark has been responsible for the design of many of the firm's most successful recent projects. His talent, design sensitivity, and desire to continue the firm's history of Moderne-rooted architecture has translated into building designs that have won National, Regional, Local, and Trade awards. Mark's professional projects span mostly Public Works architecture, including higher education and civic/government buildings.

Mark's belief in and affinity for the principles of Moderne Architecture - a belief in simple, functional buildings that are unique to a certain place and time - remain as core values at Integrus, a firm rooted in the modern vernacular and founded in 1953. This admiration for simple, honest and enduring design is a guiding philosophy that consistently influences the firm's work.

Mark holds a Bachelor of Architecture and Master of Architecture from Montana State University, is NCARB certified, and is a licensed architect in the States of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Indiana, and North Carolina. He is an active member on the Montana State University Architectural Advisory Council, the American Institute of Architects, Spokane Chapter and the Society for College and University Planning (SCUP). Mark's professional background and expertise has provided him with opportunities to critique and contribute to local university architectural programs and other local AIA awards programs. He has also had the opportunity to speak at educational and industry conferences, and to provide design consultant services to many firms in the areas of higher education facilities and community library design.
